

Yuma Sun, Easy to see through public notices position (1.30.12)

Do you believe in transparency at the Yuma Sun? Or is transparency a buzz word you liberals use a lot but refuse to practice?

Any first-year econ student would see right through your objection to the loss of public notices in your paper. Follow the money. Having public notices in your paper is a huge cash cow funded by the taxpayers. Better yet, you can depend on the huge income and the checks don't bounce.

There are the five or six morons that actually read the public notice section and will be offended by their loss. Anyone depending on the public notice section for news needs therapy.

Why don't you let the taxpayers know just how much your paper makes on these notices? That would be fair and balanced but you have no intention of letting those who pay the freight know what is really driving your agenda. You are losing your place of feeding at the public trough and now you have to compete in a capitalist society. Welcome to the real world.

Keith Copley

Wellton

Read more: <http://www.yumasun.com/articles/public-76330-notices-paper.html#ixzz1l90oJqGv>