John M. Reed Facility Found Deficient

Survey Finds 'Avoidable Pressure Ulcers,' 'Repeated UTIs,' Much More

BY KEN LITTLE
STAFF WRITER

The federal government formally terminated its Medicare/Medicaid provider agreement with the John M.

Reed Health & Rehabilitation facility in Limestone on Nov. 28 following a detailed review noting deficiencies that could potentially affect the health of residents, placing some in "immediate jeopardy."
Deficiencies found at the facility at 124 John Reed Home Road were identified during a complaint investigation started on Oct. 14 and during a joint rectification and licensure survey started on Nov. 2.
"The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services has determined that [Reed] is not in compliance with the requirements for participation. The Medicare/Medicaid program will not make payment for in-patient nursing services to residents who are admitted after Nov. 28," according to a public notice published in The Greeneville Sun.

For residents admitted before Nov. 28, "payment may continue for a maximum of 30 days for nursing services," the notice states.

The state Department of Health served as the state survey agency for the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, a division of the Department of Health & Human Services.

Surrounded by vintage radios and record players, Nadine Ricker Linton said Thursday that she never believed Magnavox would close its Greeneville operations.
"We never ever thought it would leave," said Linton, whose career at the manufacturing giant stretched from 1964 to 1995. "But little by little, it started going away."

On Thursday Linton joined Virginia Waddell, Shirley Campbell and Mildred Kilday — all one-time Magnavox employees whose combined time at Greeneville's Mag-its conclusions were that the facility failed to:

- “recognize concerns and implement interventions in the area of quality of care.”
- “ensure timely incontinence care and repositioning.”
- “prevent traumatic penile and urethral injuries.”
- “prevent avoidable pressure ulcers and excoriation.”
- prevent “repeated urinary tract infections.”
- “administer antibiotics as ordered by the physician.”
- “maintain dignity by ensuring residents are dressed in their own personal clothing.”

In the area of nursing services, the John M. Reed Home “failed to recognize concerns and implement interventions.”

“The facility failed to ensure nursing staff to repeatedly meet the needs of the residents,” the survey stated.

In one instance, a housekeeper who is not a certified nursing assistant told survey interviewers that she checked vital signs of patients one night in November due to a staffing shortage.

The employee “confirmed she is assigned or pulled to work the floor when the facility is short of CNAs.”

There are several instances noted of patients who developed sacral pressure ulcers “from untimely incontinence care and repositioning, and (not addressing) avoidable urinary tract and pressure ulcer infections” in some patients, according to the survey.

The facility also “failed to prevent repeated medication errors by not transcribing and administering medications for infectious processes, as ordered.”

OTHER DEFICIENCIES

The state recertification and licensure survey found a series of potentially dangerous building and maintenance deficiencies in the Reed facility.

A fire alarm system in the building was not properly maintained. An annual fire alarm report conducted on Oct. 9 “revealed three of four alarm system batteries failed testing and had not yet been replaced,” the survey stated.

Other survey findings included:

- The facility failed to ensure that sprinkler system control valves were provided with electronic supervisory tamper switches.

- Combustible floral arrangements and decorations were not treated with fire retardant material. Items on some residents’ doors were also not treated with fire retardant material.

- Generators, which are required to be inspected weekly and exercised under load for 30 minutes per month, had not had annual maintenance work done since February 2014.

The findings were verified by the facility maintenance supervisor and acknowledged by the administrator during an exit conference on Nov. 2, according to the state Department of Health survey.

The facility has appeal rights which are outlined in the CMS notice of termination letter to the facility, state officials said.

The John Reed facility is operated by New Beginnings

Care LLC, based in Hixson, Tenn.

New Beginnings “is a multipurpose health-care company focused on providing the best care and services to those in need of long-term care,” according to the New Beginnings website, newbeginningscare.com.

Inquiries about the notice and CMS survey were referred to Terry Walker, a regional administrator for New Beginnings. Walker did not return several calls seeking comment.

DIRECTORS’ STATEMENT

The board of directors of the John M. Reed Home issued a statement on Wednesday. It described New Beginnings as “the management company leasing the facility.”

The not-for-profit John M. Reed Home is operated by the board, which consists of community members and members of the Church of the Brethren.

“The board was in the process of ending the lease agreement with the management company and regaining control of the facility when this action took place against the management company,” the statement said.

It said that under the terms of the notice, Medicaid and Medicare patients will have to be moved from the facility over the next 30 days, and no new Medicaid and Medicare patients “can be accepted until the board can regain control of the facility, re-apply for acceptance into the Medicaid and Medicare programs and be approved.”

The action will not affect private-pay and assisted living residents who will remain at the John M. Reed Home, the statement said.

The John M. Reed facility “has been taking care of people in this community in need of assisted living and nursing home services from our area for 51 years,” the statement said.

It is licensed for 63 beds, although the exact number of patients at the facility today was unclear.

“The John M. Reed board recognizes the importance of this facility in the Limestone community and pledges to work with CMS and the state of Tennessee to keep the facility open to other patients and to regain Medicaid and Medicare certification as quickly as possible,” it said.

The board of directors “acknowledges and appreciates the assistance of local and state governmental representatives and elected officials as they move forward in this process,” the statement concludes.

State Department of Health spokeswoman Shelley Walker said that the facility surveys were conducted by state inspectors.

“The state regulations for the facility mirror federal regulations, and we use the CMS forms to report findings. We are awaiting the submission of an acceptable plan of correction from the facility,” Walker said in an email response to questions.

Town Streamlines Zoning Ordinance

BY SARAH R. GREGORY
STAFF WRITER

Updates to the town’s Zoning Ordinance streamlining the site plan review process were among several revisions given final approval by the Greeneville Board of Mayor and Aldermen on Tuesday.

Board members also approved on first reading changes to the town’s code relating to the way accrued sick leave for Greeneville firefighters is dispensed to align with a new time-keeping system now being utilized by all town departments.

ZONING UPDATES FINALIZED

After public hearings and final readings, three separate revisions updating various sections of the town’s Zoning Ordinance were approved unanimously.

All three were given unanimous approval on first reading in early November.

The first set of updates streamlines the site plan review process, which, under old practices, could have taken 60 days or more for the Greeneville Regional Planning Commission to complete.

Under the new guidelines, submitted site plans that meet all of the town’s regulations can be approved administratively by the Town Planner without presentation to the Planning Commission.

The second set of updates clarifies regulations for ingress and egress ways — primarily driveways and curb cuts — and allows for joint driveways shared by adjacent properties.

Prior to the update, the Zoning Ordinance did not have defined standards to determine what constitutes the “adequate” ingress and egress ways it required.

The new regulations reference driveways’ proximity to intersections and adjacent property lines, how they must be constructed if they impact a public sidewalk and how stormwater drainage is taken into account, among other related issues.

The final set of updates to the Zoning Ordinance establish standards for construction of fences and retaining walls and create a gateway overlay district along the Andrew Johnson Highway from Hal Henard Road to the Greeneville/Tusculum city limits.

The fencing regulations establish acceptable locations and prohibit non-temporary fencing that encroaches on a public right of way, blocks drainage flow, limits visibility at intersections, driveways or alleys or blocks access to equipment related to the electric power system.

New regulations related to the gateway overlay district generally apply to aesthetics along the route where people typically enter town limits.

Single-family and two-family properties are exempt from the rules, which primarily affect commercial properties.

The standards include provisions for green space and landscaping, concealing service, loading and equipment storage areas and garbage collection sites and prohibit “adult establishments,” mobile home parks and salvage and junk yards along the corridor.

FIREFIGHTER SICK TIME

Changes to the town’s Municipal Code dealing with the use of Greeneville Fire Department employees’ accrued sick leave were approved on first reading.

City Administrator Todd Smith explained that, due to a legal issue in the late 1980s, some longtime department employees earn sick hours at a different rate than other employees.

For example, he explained that under the old system, sick leave is used at what is considered a half rate.

Smith explained that the town’s new time-keeping system for payroll would require costly modifications to continue to track two different methods of tracking sick time.

He proposed a method in which firefighters’ existing half rate sick hours simply be doubled, then dispensed in the same manner as other employees.

Aldermen did not discuss the issue at length, but emphasized that no employees will lose any of their accrued sick time.

Fire Chief Alan Shipley noted that all of the department’s employees on the older, half-rate system have been made aware of the change and support the modification. During a public hearing, some fire department employees in the audience indicated they favor the change.

Aldermen are expected to consider the update on final reading at a future meeting.

There are plays in bridge that make a lot of sense after they're pointed out, but are often overlooked in practice because they are so unusual.
For a good example, take this deal from H.W. Kelsey's book "More Killing Defense." South gets to four spades, and West leads his singleton club. Declarer plays low from dummy, and East wins with the jack.

East then cashes the king of clubs, and West has to choose a discard. Most defenders would probably discard a low diamond on East's king of clubs, in which case declarer eventually makes the contract, losing three club tricks—period.
But if West considers the matter carefully at trick two, he discards the queen of hearts instead! And when East next cashes the ace of clubs, West discards the ace of hearts!
East then leads a heart, and South goes down one. Regardless of what declarer elects to play on the heart return, he cannot avoid eventually losing a trump trick to West.
Very fancy, you might say, but how can anybody holding the West hand be expected to be that smart? Nevertheless, the fact remains that no harm can come from discarding the heart queen at trick two. When declarer then follows to the third club, jettisoning the ace of hearts assures defeat of the contract, while the failure to do so will in some cases—this one in particular—allow declarer to make the contract.
